INTRODUCTION

This issue requires no introduction. It does require an explanation for those of you who haven't seen an issue of DW before. Normally each issue of DW contains a wide variety of materials on all aspects of the game and hobby devoted to Diplomacy. However, this issue features two monumental works, one by Steve Heinowski (the North American hobby's Boardman Number Custodian) and one by Randolph Smyth (the Calhamer Point Rating System Keeper). These two items, along with the second part of the INDEX AND MENU DIPLOMACY WORLD make up the bulk of this issue. Some of you may find them a bit dry reading.

Because of my trip to DIPCON and WORLD DIPCON I lost some 6 weeks that would normally go into producing an issue of DW. So instead of delaying or cancelling this summer's issue I decided to fill it with these two statistical monstrosities—perhaps now you'll appreciate the work the BNC and ratings keepers do. Remember, DIPLOMACY WORLD is a "journal of record" and here the record is laid out as completely as it ever has been. The work Steve and Randolph put into their efforts deserves your careful attention. I hope you'll go through both their efforts carefully and, if you can find any errors, by all means send them along.

In addition you'll find some good strategy and tactics articles, the latest news from around the hobby and bit more.

Rather than do a rush job of reporting on our trip to DIPCON XXI and WORLD DIPCON I decided to defer my reports on those, and other con reports, until the next issue. By then we should have all the results of all the summer's events. And, of course, if you hosted or attended a Diplomacy event this summer we'd like to hear about it. Otherwise you're going to have to read pages and pages of Peeribleah about my trip.

To all of you who sent material for this issue my thanx. We'll be using it next time. To Steve and Randolph a tip of the hat for a job well done.

To all of those of you who wrote, sent in subs, etc. while I was gone; don't give up hope. I will get caught up with the mail eventually. Maybe. Hopefully. Some day. Want to bet?

EDITORIAL: LEST WE FORGET

How a nation remembers its fallen tells you a lot about them. Traditionally Arlington National Cemetery has been the final resting place for America's heroes but anyone who has visited the Vietnam Memorial with its listing of America's Vietnam War dead will tell you that the impact of that Memorial is far greater than anything to be found across the Potomac. France remembers its war dead with a eternal flame beneath the Arc de Triomphe. In Russia every city, town, and village that has lost fighters in combat remembers them with a simple memorial, a large block of granite representing the "earth soul" of Mother Russia. On my recent trip I had a chance to visit England's Cenotaph, a simple memorial dedicated "To the Glorious Dead" of all British forces in all wars. And once you are used to the idea that it's located right in the middle of Whitehall's traffic pattern, it all sort of makes sense. After all, who better than politicians and generals should be reminded on a daily basis of the costs of their wars? Italy's unknown soldier is buried in the middle of the Memorial to Italy's first king, Victor Emmanuel. It's impossible to miss the building since it sits on one of Rome's highest hills and the building looks like a giant wedding cake.

In a sense this issue represents a memorial to all those who have participated in the postal Diplomacy hobby since its beginnings some 25 years ago. Randolph Smyth's Call Point Count Rating List includes over 1,500 names of past and present postal Diplomacy players. If you've been around as long as I have reading over that list will bring back memories from years ago. Some good and some bad but each a part of our Diplomacy experience. If you are too new to have many memories to look back on you may consider using this list as a guide to help evaluate other players in your present and future games. One thing I've learned over the past few years is that nearly all Diplomacy players tend to reach a certain level of playing skill and then maintain that level for as long as they are in the hobby. And for most of us that plateau is reached fairly quickly. Steve Heinowski's list of postal Diplomacy game starts is not complete, of course. It would have filled this issue completely if he had started with the first postal Diplomacy game in 1964. And, as you can see, many games are still in progress. But, perhaps, you'll notice that if you were in that have ended and aren't yet recorded. By all means drop him a line to help him get the record corrected. Once again there's a tremendous amount of factual material here. More than any one of us can comprehend at one reading I'm sure. But as you read over this list and refer back to it later keep one thing in mind. These games are just statistical entries filled with numbers and faceless names. Each game was a story in itself and each participant was a real person. Too often we forget that our hobby is made up of real people, not merely numbers and institutions. Diplomacy may be a game but it is the people that have kept the hobby going for all these years. And finally keep in mind the literary tradition the hobby has as represented in the IMDW Subject Index. As you will see there are few aspects of the hobby and game that haven't been examined over the past twenty-five years. Almost every literary form has been used to describe Diplomacy in all its many facets. And yet new works continue to flow out of the creativity of our hobby's members. As long as they do the list of memories will grow and grow.

As sure as I know that the great majority of you will find this issue interesting and valuable, I also know that one or two of you will feel you didn't get what you wanted for and that this issue was a "rip off." So be it. If that's the way you feel let me know, I'll gladly credit your subscription with a credit for this issue. And while at it be sure to include an article for the next issue of DW. That way we can all have the kind of thing you want to read.

CORRECTIONS

If you have any additions or corrections to either the CPRL or the BNC Game Results stats please send them to: Randolph Smyth (CPRL), 1023-555 St. Mary Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba R3C 3X4, CANADA; or Steve Heinowski (BNC), 51500 Portman Rd., RD 2, Amherst, Ohio 44004. And while you're at it why not send the BNC a couple of bucks to help him cover his considerable overhead? I'm sure he'd appreciate it.

NEWS OF THE WORLD

HOBBY AWARD WINNERS: The results of the 1988 Awards selection are in: Simon Billenness and John Caruso were co-recipients of the Don Miller Memorial Award for their service to the hobby as administrators of the PDO Relief Auction. David McCrumb won the John Koning Memorial Award for outstanding play of Diplomacy. And there was a tie for the Rod Walker Award for outstanding literary achievement between Mark Berch, for his three part issue of DIPLOMACY DIGEST devoted to gamemastering; and Fred Davis, for his work on the 1987-1988 edition of the North American Variant Bank Catalog. Congratulations to all. As soon as Vince Lutterbie returns the individual plaques to Fred and he has time to get them engraved and buy a couple of more they'll be in the mail to you. Fortunately the perpetual awards won't have to be sent very far. Perhaps we can arrange an exchange ceremony between Simon and John on the Narrows Bridge.

PEERICON VIII: It's true. There is no place like home. Texas and DIPCON, England and WORLD DIPCON, and Italy and PASTACON were great but it's nice to be home and I'm looking forward to PEERICON on the 20th and 21st of August (delayed from July). If you're in the neighborhood why don't you drop in and say hello?

DW #50 EDITORIAL RESPONSE: Our last issue generated a lot of mail. Several people wrote to complain about our publishing Robert Sacks' piece and to them I can only say that he has as much a right to express his views—strange as they may be—in DW as anyone does. If it were otherwise I would not be publishing this magazine. To those of you who wrote about the Bad Boys, you have just read all I have to say about that subject for the moment.

HOW TIME FLIES: It's hard to believe it has now been three years since I took over as DW's publisher and editor. Where does the time go? To all of you who have helped in so many different ways in keeping the hobby flagship afloat and on course my thanx. It hasn't always been smooth sailing but I think we've done quite well. Perhaps some of it will rub off on my neighbor, Mr. Connor.

1989 DIPCON SITE SELECTED: If you haven't heard by now I should inform you that next year's DIPCON will be held here in San Diego, co-hosted by the people who bring you PEERICON and CAMCON, the last weekend of July. The DIPCON Administration Committee consists of Ron Cameron, Ken Peel, and myself as chairman. At that event a definite site (somewhere in North America) and definite date (sometime in 1990) will be selected for the second WORLD DIPCON, as well as a site for the 1990 North American DIPCON. If you're interested in hosting either event be sure to let me know ASAP.

A PAIR OF MILESTONES: THE APPALACHIAN GENERAL's 50th issue appeared recently and old Stonewall never looked so good. Dave McCrumb, who just won the Koning Award for outstanding play of the hobby, has finally mastered the art of getting a decent copy out of his printer. If you like regular or variant Diplomacy you ought to check this out. In addition you can keep up with the writing career of Dave's wife, Sharyn, whose BIMBOS OF THE DEATH SUN just won the Mystery Writers of America Edgar Allan Poe Award for best paperback original 1988. Now I can't wait to see how a new baby will affect Dave's play and Sharyn's writing. Fred Davis's BUSHWACKER, on the other hand, is about to publish issue number 200! That's a remarkable feat in this hobby. I remember, vaguely, some fifteen years ago presenting Fred with a Johnny Award for "outstanding new variant magazine." Time has proven us right. Fred's major project recently was the preparation of a new Catalog for the North American Variant Bank that he heads. The hobby saw fit to award Fred this year's Rod Walker Award for outstanding literary achievement. BUSHWACKER has always been filled with lots of variant games, news, chatter, etc. In fact it's probably one of the most consistent publications in the history of the hobby. Just what you'd expect from Fred. And yes, folks, he was like that fifteen years ago!

EVERYTHING #76 OUT: Melinda Holley, as if she didn't already have enough to do, recently Continued on page 98.

AUSTRIAN OPENINGS: A LOOK AT THE NUMBERS

David Hood

Recently I conducted a study of Spring 1901 orders in 54 different games, from some 13 Diplomacy publications. My purpose was to find out what openings people were using, and to comment about the choices people were making on the first turn of the game. This will be the first of a series of articles reporting on the results of the study and my interpretation of these results.

In order for you as a reader to buy my analysis, however, you will need to accept my premise that openings are the primary determinant of the course of the game. It is not to say that the game doesn't evolve every season and that subsequent moves on the part of players do not substantially alter the course of events. What I argue against is the belief held in some circles, and even by some authors in DIPLOMACY WORLD ANTHOLOGY Vol. I, that the opening moves are not all that important — even to the point of claiming that one can simply hold in Spring 1901 and generally come out okay!

No, I think it is clear that the Opening usually identifies the Powers which will be targets, and the ones which will make it to the Mid Game. Often, a poor Opening dooms the Power in question, especially if that Power is particularly vulnerable in 1901.

That much having been said, let's move on to discuss the Power that is arguably most at risk in 1901: Austria. Let me start by saying that I come from the perspective of my face to face experience. In the Carolina Amateur Diplomats standings after the games, Austria has usually been ranked about third or fourth. At DIXIECON last March the Dual Monarchy was the top place finisher, much to the surprise of many. So I am accustomed to seeing Austria do better in Diplomacy than has apparently been the case in play by mail competition.

After reviewing the results of my 54 game survey, I will argue that Austria's poor performance may very well be the result of poor opening moves. Since they are so much in the center of things in the early stages of the game, Austria can ill-afford to lay low in 1901 and just "see what happens." Instead, they usually need to go for the throat early, before their potential adversaries have time to mount a major offensive. Let me go through each unit and describe what happens in Spring 1901:

ARMY VIENNA - The key unit in Austria's offense - it is the move that determines the direction of Red expansion. In my study, ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA was ordered 21 times which is a reflection of Austria's traditional rivalry with another land power, Russia. The second most ordered move, ARMY VIENNA-BUDAPEST, ordered 16 times, is much weaker and really does little for Austria in 1901. A much better move, ARMY VIENNA-TRIESTE ordered 12 times, comes in third. There is also the sometimes useful ARMY VIENNA-TYROL ordered 3 times, the virtually useless ARMY VIENNA-BOHEMIA, ordered once, and the nonsensical ARMY VIENNA-HOLD, ordered once.

In my opinion the move to Budapest is a sorry one for Army Vienna and probably contributes to Austria's poor showing. It can do little in the Fall except attack Rumania (in which case Galicia would have been better) or defend (in which case Galicia or Trieste would still have been better). Plus, it is somewhat rare for Austria to be left alone in Spring 1901 by both Russia and Italy (12 out of 54 games), so it makes sense for Austria to go ahead and commit one way or the other.

Those sixteen games in which ARMY VIENNA-BUDAPEST was used should probably have been divided into either ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA or ARMY VIENNA-TRIESTE. Russia ordered Galicia 28 times, and Italy threatened by either Army Venice-Trieste or Army Venice-Tyrolia, Army Rome-Venice a total of 30 times. So Austria is often behind from the word "Go." That much having been said, let's move on to ARMY BUDAPEST - Normally, this unit is ordered to Serbia, where it can be used to support any number of moves on Greece, Rumania, or Bulgaria in the Fall. But there are a few alternatives. ARMY BUDAPEST-RUMANIA was used only twice; which I think was unfortunate. It is often very successful in shock value, and can still be used to go back to Serbia or support Turkish moves in the event of Fleet Ankara-Black Sea. It should have been used at least 2-3 more times.

ARMY BUDAPEST SUPPORTS ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA is a nifty little move, as it often traps the Russian Army Warsaw with no role to play in Fall 1901. It was used 4 times in the study; which is probably also a little low. There was also one game each for ARMY BUDAPEST-TRIESTE and ARMY BUDAPEST-GALICIA; which is usually coupled with Army Vienna going to the other space. In short, ARMY BUDAPEST-SERBIA was used 46 times; which is probably 4-5 times too many. Austrian players may benefit from a little more ARMY BUDAPEST-RUMANIA or ARMY BUDAPEST SUPPORTS ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA.

FLEET TRIESTE - Here we have even more uniformity, with 48 out of 54 opting to move to Albania en route to Greece. This is obviously the best move for the fleet, but sometimes FLEET TRIESTE HOLD, ordered 5 times, may be useful in blocking Italian attacks (or appearing to do so to fool Russia and Turkey into fighting...). There was also one instance of FLEET TRIESTE-ADRIATIC in an attack on Italy; but then again, that was Jim Diehl.

Overall, then, the most common Austrian openings were FLEET TRIESTE-ALBANIA, ARMY BUDAPEST-SERBIA, and ARMY GALICIA-VIENNA. My major problem with the results is ARMY VIENNA-BUDAPEST; which should usually be ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA instead. Notwithstanding, some of the "Austrian Naval Options" hogwash you read sometimes, Austria should almost always ally with a fleet power like Italy or Turkey, because the spheres of influence are much more clearly defined (much like the English-German Alliance in the west).

This will put Austria at odds with Russia most of the time, although sometimes the Austrian-Russian Alliance can work if Italy is a sucker. Thus, ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA should be more prevalent in my opinion, as well as ARMY BUDAPEST-RUMANIA or ARMY BUDAPEST SUPPORTS ARMY VIENNA-GALICIA.

The most important thing for the Austrian player to remember is to choose his victim right away. Waiting around to watch how other people are moving before deciding usually means death.

MORE COMMENTS:

From Mark Berch: David's main topic of discussion is ARMY VIENNA-BUDAPEST. Looking at my database of 315 games, I find it used 22½% of the time, and the third most common opening. By contrast, Dave shows 29½% and the second most common opening. My database goes up to only about 1978. Dave's, I understand, is centered in the mid-1980s. It may be that there's been a big jump in the use of ARMY VIENNA-BUDAPEST, or it may be a statistical fluke arising from the smallness of his 54 game survey. I then looked at just the 59 games with ARMY VIENNA-BUDAPEST, to see what also happened. Army Venice-Trieste, 3%; Army Warsaw-Galicia, 35%; Both, 10%; Neither, 52%.

From Larry Peery: Just to prove than an even smaller data base can be interesting I refer you to a recent face to face experience of mine. Playing Russia I managed to NMR in Spring 1901. That's right, I NMR'd in a FTF game in Spring 1901! Even more remarkable, I went on to win that game some 15 hours and 15 game years later. Of course, it took my major opponent falling asleep over the gameboard to do it, but what the hell. A win's a win, right?

DW #46, pp. 76-78, featured a truncated version of the CPCRL, the on ratings list I know of that considers the records of the postal hobby rig back to the first games in the mid-'60s. I cut it off after 60 nam because there are over 1500 entries altogether, and I just KNEW nobc wanted to see THAT. But Larry assured me that you did; so here it is, t whole thing, updated as far as EVERYTHING #76 (Summer 1988).

The list is in reverse order this time: the guys with the low ratings start it off, and things build to a climax. Everyone with exact the same rating is listed alphabetically on the main list: find your na in the alphabetical list that runs alongside, then, using your rating, fi yourself on the main list to get more information.

On the main list, the first column is last names, the second column first names (as they appear in TERMINUS/EVERYTHING). Then, the issue EVERYTHING and the year of its publication where the player first receiv credit for a win or draw; followed by the issue and year where the play last appeared. These two columns give some idea of the "career period" of player: was he active in the 60s, 70s, 80s, or throughout?

TERMINUS was the predecessor of EVERYTHING, and reported most of t games from the 60s. If the first number in one of these columns is "0 then the player is an old-timer who appeared in TERMINUS. TERMINUS issu were not dated themselves, so the second number in the column indicates t year of the first game's Boardman number. Look at Doug Beyerlein, seco from the end of the list: "0 66" appears after his name, so his first ga was reported in TERMINUS and had a 1966-xx Boardman Number. You don usually have to worry about this notation for practical purposes, as t vast majority of the players from the 60s are long gone.

The third column of numbers is the rating itself. Every regular ga of postal Diplomacy ever completed has one Calhamer point associated wi it. The winner of the game gets the point, drawing players share equally. No credit for "strong second": see the Rulebook. Even a seven-w draw will earn each participant 0.14 points in this system, though personally think that players should LOSE points for such a wimpy result.

In fact, points are never lost: a win from the 60s is rated as high as one today. However, sharp-eyed readers may have noticed that a few ol time players "lost" points since the list of DW #46. A lot of the TERMIN results were repeated in early issues of EVERYTHING, and this was nev realized until I expanded the system a few months ago. Double-counti meant double-rating; so people that were active in TERMINUS have "los points they never really had in the first place.

In this system, as with many others, activity can partially compensa for mediocre skill: enter a lot of games and you'll pick up a few Calham points just by dumb luck, "worth" just as much as the ones earned by a g who wins every game he enters. However, there's no good way to correct f this; and perhaps it shouldn't be arbitrarily corrected anyhow. Is sensible to make any distinction between native skill and experience?

After the rating column is one that gives the number of outright wi by the player. Compare this number to the total rating: a player whose wi account almost entirely for his rating doesn't draw very much and pla with quite a different style from the fellow with the same rating but mu fewer wins (indicating a lot of draws instead).

The final column is a rating of the player's original positions, i. ignoring the results s/he obtained as a standby. The "real" rating in t central column of figures gives the same credit for taking over a 16-cent position and winning the next game/year as it does for slugging it out fr Spring 1901. Some players gained a majority of their points through t play of standby positions, quite a feat considering how crummy most those positions are. In other cases, the "original-player" rating identical to the "real" rating: those players didn't take any stand positions to a successful conclusion. Identical ratings may also indicate British/European player, where standbys are generally not used.

A note on the accuracy of these figures: I think they're mighty close, o perfect, but absolute perfection is too much to hope for in such a huge atabase. A game which was never reported in TERMINUS or EVERYTHING gets no credit for the victor(s). In order to include most of the earlier results, 've overlooked most situations that would cause a game to be labelled "irregular" today. E-mail games are included but those described as "local" are not. Gross GMing abuses will result in the game being ignored, but just about anything that could happen in good faith doesn't bother me. Anyone who has detailed information on their own playing records is urged to compare their data with mine and contact me if there is any discrepancy.

The most likely place where errors may creep in is where two players have similar names. For instance, I can't be sure that Ron MM Brown and Ron Snafu Brown have been properly credited, since several results are just listed as "Ron Brown". (I've given most of these to Ron MM Brown, since they're from an earlier period and Ron Snafu Brown joined the hobby somewhat later.) Similarly, I have a strong suspicion that J T. Holcombe and T.J. Holcombe (both with 1 00 rating point) are the same person; but I don't want to combine their files without confirmation.

There is one "column" of stuff in this database that you don't see here. Every player is matched to a list of all the games they've ever won/drawn. This is a cross-check on the sums that are listed in the columns you see---that's how I finally found out that some of the TERMINUS games were double-counted---but to include it here would have tripled the length of the printout. The # after the last names of the more successful or active players is just a computer notation that their list of games has overflowed my standard register, and directs me to the overflow files.

This file includes Boardman numbers on each game together with an indication of the size of the draw and whether the player was a standby. I would like to spread this data fairly widely around the hobby, since I don't expect to be involved forever and it would be a shame if it was eventually lost. I will print out the "full" list, including the game data, for anyone who sends $5.00 (Canadian and U.S. $ at par, as it costs me more to mail to the U.S.).

Theoretically, I suppose you could use this information to check up on your opponents in a new game; but in fact, the list of Boardman numbers won't tell you anything significant that you can't deduce from what's given here. The offer is really aimed at the likes of archivists, record-keepers, ratingsmasters, and other packrats.

To save you counting rows and rows of names, the ratings list breaks down as follows: there are a total of 1518 names on the database at the moment (constantly growing, since each EVERYTHING features an average of 15-20 new players who have never appeared before). Out of this number, only 504 have more than one rating point, 273 have more than two, 163 have more than three, and 77 have more than five. The fourteen members of the "double-digit club" (ten points or more) would nicely fill two Diplomacy games, though I believe about half of them have left the hobby.

A final word of thanks to Larry for making space to publish this at all. I've put several hundred hours into putting this database together over the past few years; obviously it interests me. I hope you're (almost) equally interested in the record of everyone that has ever won or drawn a game of postal Diplomacy.

Remember, comments, corrections, suggestions, etc. to Randolph Smyth, 1023-555 St. Mary Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba, R3C 3X4, CANADA.

MY FAVORITE COUNTRY: GERMANY

Steve Cooley

There was a time in my life when I loved Diplomacy, so long as I got to play England or France. Russia and Turkey had possibilities. However, Italy, Austria, and Germany were countries that would send me scrambling for the TV Guide. A few years ago Ron Spitzer showed me the power inherent in the Austrian-Italian Alliance and forever changed my opinion about playing either of them separately. Still, Germany was the kiss of death. Now, I love to play it and will even trade for it in face-to-face games.

There have been many strategy and tactics articles written about Germany over the years. Most of them tend to take a rather negative over-all outlook on Germany's chances. "How to Win With Germany" by Doug Beyerlein in DIPLOMACY WORLD #2 gives Germany "once chance in ten" to win. He says that the German player must have "the right strategy ...flawless tactics...a lot of luck" and "unceasing diplomacy" in order to win. In my opinion, you don't need luck and your chances are as good, if not better, than anyone else's. There is one quality that a good German player must have: aggressiveness, almost to the point of recklessness. The German must seize every opportunity. If there is none, he must create one.

If this sounds like an ad for Charles Atlas ("Tired of getting sand kicked in your face? Are you a 98 pound weakling?...), it's no accident. Players perceive Germany as a "weak" country because of its central position. As I discovered under the tutelage of Randy Goldring, this is Germany's key advantage; this is what sets it above all the other countries, with the possible exception of England. Consider this: Napoleon made a career out of winning from the interior (central) position; he lost only when he failed to fully capitalize on this advantage.

My preferred opening will not come as a surprise: Army Munich-Ruhr, Fleet Kiel-Denmark, Army Berlin-Kiel. There are two exceptions to this: Army Munich-Burgundy or Army Munich-Tyrolia. The first I use if I'm sure France won't move there and I can't work with him as an ally. I move to Tyrolia only if I'm sure France is forcing Burgundy and Italy is moving to Tyrolia with an eye toward Munich. I negotiate hard to avoid either of the above situations. This is the major requisite of being successful as Germany, YOU must work harder than anyone else on the board.

There are several reasons I prefer the listed opening moves. The first is that they provide an excellent defense versus an English-French Alliance. The second is that they provide some awesome offensive possibilities. Many players use this opening for its obvious try at three centers: Belgium, Holland, and Denmark. There are times when that may be appropriate. However, as I will outline in the discussion of negotiation below, it is not the strongest possibility.

Austria: Accept or offer neutrality (rarely a problem). I try to find out how concerned he is about a Russian-Turkish Alliance. If it's strong and he's not, I may have to attack Russia very early.

England: I often suggest movement into the Channel; which is usually laughed at — the last laugh he'll have for a while!

Italy: I try to convince Italy to stay out of Tyrolia. Often, the Italian makes that decision on his own because he doesn't want to "offend" me.

Russia: I may threaten a western triple if I feel there's a Russian-Turkish Alliance in the wind. Otherwise, I try to promote neutrality and a southern concentration of Russian forces.

Turkey: I try to worry him about everything. Basically, all I want from this conversation is information.

France: The best for last. I suggest that he open Fleet Brest-Mid Atlantic, Army Paris-Picardy, and Army Marseilles-Spain. Most are reluctant until I explain what will happen in Fall 1901: GERMANY: Fleet Denmark-North, Army Kiel-Denmark, Army Ruhr-Holland. FRANCE: Fleet English Channel Supports GERMAN Fleet Denmark-North Sea, Army Picardy-Belgium, Army Spain-Portugal.

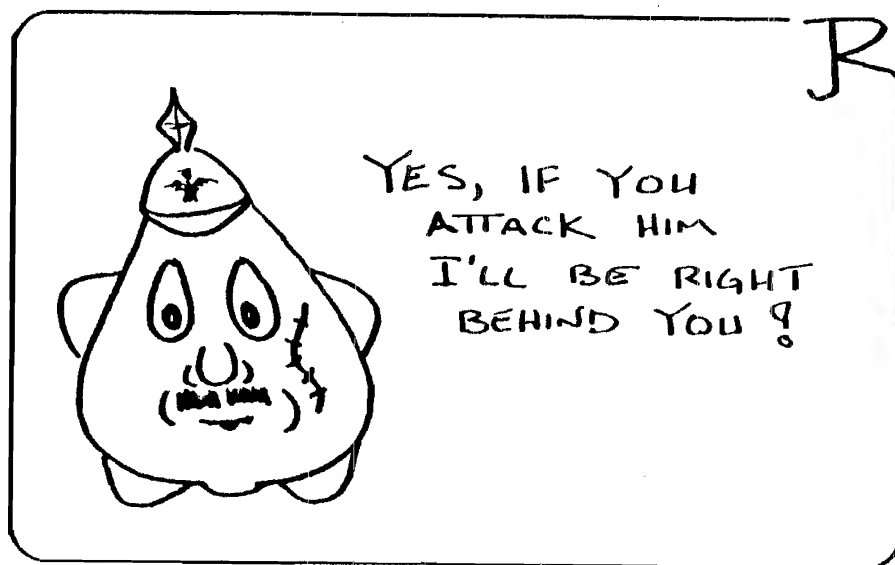

This accomplishes several things. Obviously, it tosses England out of the North Sea and into a state of panic. Also obvious is that both France and Germany build two units. England is not likely to risk London to block either France or Germany out of a dot (If he/she opened Army Liverpool-Yorkshire; then Fleet Norwegian Supports Fleet North, Fleet North Sea hold, Army Yorkshire-London is safe, but not likely). Less obvious is that it puts Germany in the driver's seat. I now have the option of continuing to attack England, or leaving France pretty much on his own while I attack Russia.

What frequently happens is that the English player will throw me out of the North Sea with his fleet in Norway. Meanwhile, the French player gets fleets into the Irish and English Channel (with a newly built fleet from Brest). Hopefully, I've talked the Russian into moving into Norway ("to cut support of Fleet North in repayment for generously not contesting Sweden"); which he will get as I'm sliding into Sweden moving Fleet Kiel-Denmark (or Baltic if I'm not sure of Russia getting Norway), retreating Fleet North-Norwegian, and maybe moving Army Munich-Silesia. If all goes well, I'm off and running at seven centers (at least) and my back is fairly secure as England and France are usually too entangled to do anything but fight each other.

Now, I must decide whether to take more than St. Petersburg from the Russian, or turn on my French ally. There are no ironclad rules here. The key is what is the best opportunity. Is Burgundy open? Can I get into Belgium and/or at least the English Channel? Is England still a viable power (i.e., at least two fleets)? If so, it's probably best to look elsewhere. Can I go further than the Warsaw/Moscow line? If so, maintaining the alliance may guarantee me a win. Just as important as these conditions are the relative abilities and attitudes of the French and Russian players. If one is a putz or ready to quit, that may give me the edge I need to quickly gain the upper hand.

In conclusion, playing Germany need not be a few hours spent staving off elimination. Admittedly, the strategy I've outlined will not always work, but it's been pretty successful for me. There are other alliances that have worked for me. Russia and England can work nicely, but require a greater risk on Germany's part. In your next face-to-face game; when an opponent starts moaning about drawing Germany; offer him or her Turkey in exchange. Nice work! You've just increased your chances of winning and having fun.

THE BOARDMAN NUMBERS: THE LISTS GO ON

The job of Boardman Number Custodian (BNC) is the worst in the hobby. Fortunately we've been very fortunate to have some very talented and dedicated people hold that position over the years. The current BNC is Steve Heinowski and he is assisted by Melinda Ann Holley, who publishes EVERYTHING, the official journal of the BNC which lists all game starts and stats. Without their efforts there would be no real Diplomacy hobby because it is they who bring order to the chaos created by other publishers and gamemasters.

In addition to his on going job of assigning Boardman Numbers for new regular postal Diplomacy game starts in North America, and keeping track of what happens to those games, each BNC has, to a greater or lesser degree, attempted to bring up to date the records of the BNC by going back and seeking to find out what happened to games that were abandoned or orphaned in earlier days. This is a time-consuming and often frustrating task, but an important one.

In the pages that will follow you will find a listing for every regular postal Diplomacy game started in North America since 1980. For the completed games you will find the magazine in which the game was published, the name of the publisher/gamemaster, the year the game ended, and the results of the game: WIN, Draw, etc. with the names of the winner or survivors and the country they played. For the games for which no data is available you will find a blank. I hope that if you are or were a publisher, gamemaster, or player for any of those games and you have the information above for that game you will send it to Steve Heinowski, 51500 Portman Rd., RD 2, Anherst, Ohio 44001. The Lists are current through EVERYTHING #75.

"Athletes: Photographs 1860-1986" illustrates the dramatic changes in both sports and photography over the last 125 years. This photo, from the exhibition, was taken in 1899.

Actually this is a picture of Margaret Gemignani demonstrating her version of the Lepanto Opening in EREHWON #3 back in 1967.

HOW TO LIE

General John McCausland

There are no two ways about it, lying is the best way to win a game of Diplomacy. If you expect to gain a solo victory, you will have to lie to at least one person, and more likely two or three. The trick is in trying to convince people that you really didn't lie to them, and if you did it was unintentional and such a minor lie that it is not worth worrying about.

Lying in a Diplomacy game follows a pattern that is commonly called the Beginning, Mid-, and End-Game. Each has its own particular type and style of lying, and the use of each type is usually more indicative of the stage of the game than how the alignments of the Great Powers match up.

The Beginning Game is a time of quickly shifting alliances and power structures. The situation is changing so quickly, that there is very little to be gained by outright lying. The best method here is to spread rumors of attacks and forming alliances. However, these must never originate from yourself. Always say that someone else told you that fact, if you are a western power say that an eastern power gave you the information. If the information appears to not be coming directly from you but from somebody that is not very interested in that part of the board, it is more likely to be believed. If you add a little bit of doubt on your part, they are even more likely to believe it, and if the information turns out to be false (as it probably will since you made it up) you can point to your initial distrust. The ultimate goal is to have everything so confusing that nobody trusts anyone but you.

The Mid-Game is where you get into some serious lying. Now is when you can gain some advantage. Usually there are four or five major powers vying for the supply centers of the weaker nations. In this race, cooperation is required. However, it is also the best time to pull off an effective stab. This is accomplished by telling your current ally exactly what you are doing for two or three consecutive seasons, even if they gain a little more than you do. Then, in the last season, do nothing that you promise, instead moving on their positions and capturing or preparing to capture their supply centers.

The lies used in the End-Game are very similar to those in the Mid-Game. The only major difference is that now you are lying to the enemy rather than your ally. You do not want to lose a good ally, so lying to them (unless it will give you the win within three seasons) will only make them mad and more likely to attack you. The goal in lying to the enemy is to make them think that you are changing allegiances to their side and have them make moves accordingly. Since you talked with them so much, you should now know their moves intimately (if you managed to convince them) and be able to make your moves more successful.

Lying is an art that is especially suited to Diplomacy. If you can do it and still have people think that you are telling the truth, your job is just that much easier. Practice in how and when to lie is the trick to a successful game.

DID YOU REMEMBER TO VOTE IN THIS YEAR'S RUNESTONE POLL?

KATHY'S KOUNTRY

General John McCausland

Italy is the least understood of all the Great Powers in Diplomacy. There are several reasons for this. The greatest is that Italy is neither in the eastern nor the western part of the map, but some place in between. It looks like she should be a sea power since its land mass extends out into the Mediterranean, but Italy still starts with only one fleet and two armies. Historically, Italy has always been a weak sister in Europe, and people tend to forget that this is not history.

While there are many reasons for Italy being ranked only sixth in the DragonsTooth Rating System (only above lowly Austria), there are several players that manage to do well with Italy every time that they play it. The most well known of these is Kathy Byrne Caruso, who has such a good reputation as Italy that a variant called "The Five Italies" is subtitled "Kathy's Variant." While Kathy gets most of the hype, there are other players who have a lot of success with Italy. The major reason for their success is that they tend to be "go-getters," rather than "wait-and-see" players. They have also realized that Italy has more options available to them than any other country on the board.

The major psychological factor that holds back most people when they play Italy is the historical record. However, it must be realized that history is not repeated in this game. Italy has full control of the Mediterranean at the beginning of the game. All the British fleets are gone (and will not appear for a long time, if ever), the French are only in the Atlantic, and Austria, Russia, and Turkey are locked in backwater areas. Italy has free reign to move her sea power wherever she wishes.

The location of Italy bothers many players. Should they be concerned with what happens in the east or the west? Who should they attack? While this does present a perplexing problem, it is also a blessing. Italy is the only country on the board that can attack every other power. How is this possible? Let me show you.

An Italian attack on Austria is the most obvious first opponent. However, this is usually the worst thing that Italy could do. Austria serves as a wonderful buffer between Russia and usually draws most of Turkey's attention as well. If Russia and Turkey are concentrating on Austria, they have usually forgotten about Italy. This allows more freedom of movement, plus Austria is usually willing to give support when faced with a Russian/Turkish Alliance. The only hope to prevent this is to arrange with Russia for a combined attack on Turkey once Austria has been eliminated.

France is a good target in the early part of the game. She can be attacked by both land and sea. There are two good potential allies in England and Germany, neither of which can threaten you very much. The major problem is that France should pick up at least two new centers in the first year, and so she may be difficult to defeat; and impossible if none of the proposed alliances materialize. An advantage to this scenarios is that it gives Italy an entrance into the Atlantic.

Turkey is probably the best target for the Italians in the first year. There are many reasons for this. First, they are your major threat to supremacy in the Mediterranean. Only Turkey can build two Mediterranean fleets in one season. Secondly, you can attack their vulnerable southern areas by sea; while the Russians and Austrians take the more difficult land and Black Sea approaches. Thirdly, you can bottle up the Russian fleets in the Black Sea and start to surround Austria for a mid-game stab. An attack on Turkey also means that once you finish that campaign, your new builds are close to the new front; whether that is in Austria or France; while the units in Turkey can finish mopping up or hit Austria from the other side.

England is not an obvious opponent, but it has been done with great success. The goal here is not so much to defeat England, but rather to treat this as a side show to pick up a few extra centers while your main campaign occurs in the eastern area as was described above. This can only be performed with French help, but if they agree, Italy usually gets more than they put into it. It also has the added advantage that when the time is right (about the time the eastern campaign is finishing up), you are now positioned on two sides of France.

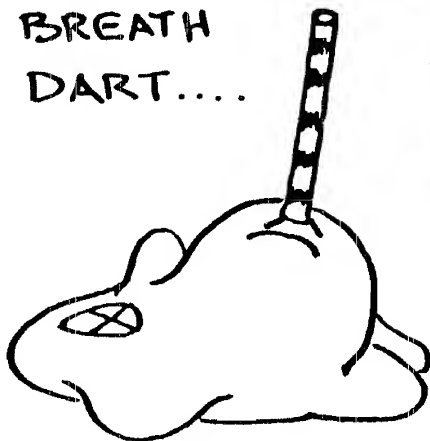

Germany is a popular enemy for novices when they play Italy. It does not look like an obvious enemy, but yet Munich is only two moves away and can therefore be captured in the first year. Novices tend to think that a move to Tyrolia looks like an attack on Austria and that the Germans will ignore that unit. Usually they do, Italy moves more units north to help retain and expand their holdings, leaving very little at home. Austria and France then close in, and an army in Berlin may be the last Italian center. A second, though less popular scenario, is a 1901 capture of Munich and then a three pronged attack on France (from the sea, and from the land via Piedmont and Munich). These attacks must be carried out with care, else too many units end up too far away from home to help out in case of a stab.

Russia is the most difficult country for the Italian player to attack. This can only be attempted with a very trustworthy and reliable Austrian ally. Since it takes such a long time for Italian armies to reach Russian soil, and fleets are useless, there must be a second opponent. This is usually Turkey, since Austria may be convinced to join in. An attack on France would be suicidal since your armies are heading north and not in position to thwart French land attacks. If the campaign is successful, Russia and Turkey should be eliminated while you are now positioned on three sides of Austria.

As you can see, there are many options for an adventurous Italian player. All of the campaigns I have described are viable and will give gains that can be protected and used to great advantage in the mid-game. The major point the Italian must remember is that to win they must be aggressive. There is only one free center for them to collect, everything else must be earned. With good solid play, and effective diplomacy, a victory or at least a draw is always possible.

POINTS ON WINNING

David McCrumb

Winning Diplomacy games is not an easy task. It takes a lot of dedication, work and some luck. There are several things you can do to help increase your chances. They will not always work, but that is because six other people are trying for the same goal that you are, that elusive victory.

The single most important element in trying to gain a victory in a play-by-mail Diplomacy game is to always send in moves. The importance of this statement was shown to me in my first Diplomacy game start. My closest ally stabbed me in a spring turn and then NMRed (No Moves Received) the following fall season. He basically gave me a free turn of attack. I was able to completely push him back and turn his flank to my eventual win. This was that player's only NMR, but it proved devastating. Giving another player a free turn will never help you.

What is the best method for guaranteeing that you have moves submitted every season? The best guarantee is to phone your moves into the gamemaster. However, many gamemasters frown on this behaviour (myself included) if used frequently. After all it is a play-by-mail game. The second best method is to include a postcard with our moves, and ask the GM to date it and send it back after the moves have arrived. You should send the moves early so that you can receive the postcard back before the due date so that you know they arrived on time. Another method is to send two identical sets of orders. There are several things to watch when you do this. Make sure that the moves are in fact identical. They should also not be mailed on the same day. If a mail bag is delayed or misplaced, both letters will probably be in it if mailed at the same time and place.

Diplomacy is almost as important in winning a game. You should keep in touch with everyone in the game. This way they know that you are interested in playing and therefore much more likely to ally with you. Constant contact also brings familiarity and this will usually allow you to pick up important scraps of information from other players about your allies and your enemies.

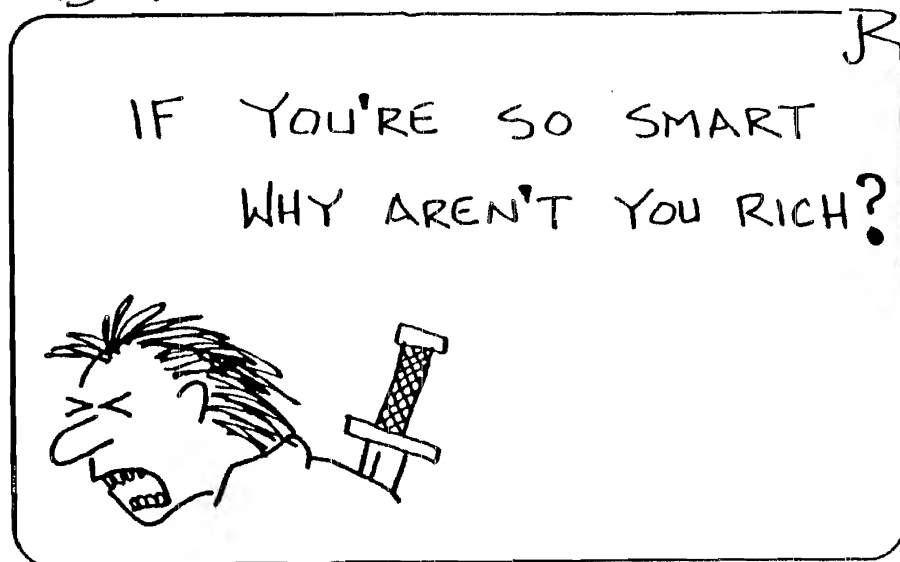

Knowing the game helps. If you do not know how to move the pieces correctly there is no chance of your winning. Strategy and tactics are also very important. These are things that you learn over time. The best teaching method is to become a standby player in a game that has already started. You can learn the moves, follow the strategy from within the game, and try out some of your own ideas. If you try to learn with this method, ask the gamemaster to only place you in a position that will be playable. You will not learn anything if you play two seasons and are then eliminated.

The fourth factor in trying to win is knowing your opponents. While this is much less important than the previous points, this knowledge can make the difference. Does your current ally love to stab? Will they suicide against you if you stab them? How competent is your enemy or your ally? Can you believe what a particular player says or should you be wary of every syllable they utter? Knowing how much you can push someone, or how far to trust them can make formulating your plans much easier and less risky. If you have two enemies to choose from, wouldn't you rather pick the one that you think you can defeat?

The last factor in gaining a win is luck. Many people will argue against this point, but the fact remains that luck is part of the play-by-mail game. Who your neighbor happens to be is a big factor, but there are others. The state of mind when a correspondence letter is written or received can dramatically affect a game. Two letters received on the same day could have an effect depending on the order in which they were opened. And lost correspondence, or worse yet lost moves, could have a dramatic effect on the outcome. Minimizing the luck factor, and turning it to your advantage is part of the goal of a successful Diplomacy player.

As you can see, there are several factors that must be taken into account when playing Diplomacy. There are methods for trying to gain that victory, and things that a player must know and do. They will not always propel you to a win, but if you follow them they will help you to achieve your share of victories.

THE INDEX AND MENU DIPLOMACY WORLD: PART TWO: SUBJECT LIST (ISSUES 1-49)

Most major articles are included but not every item published in DW is listed here.

Congrats!

HOUSE OF LORDS #16 APPEARS; This lively and informative roundtable discussion of various topics is always worthwhile reading for publishers and gamemasters. The latest issue is $1 from Julie Martin, 17601 Lisa Dr., Rockville, MD 20855-1319.

AN AMERICAN RUSTY BOLTS AWARD? That's what Simon Billenness is proposing and he's looking for nominations. I won't go into the whole story here but you can read all about it in the latest issue of EXCITEMENT CITY UNLIMITED #10, available from Simon for 75¢ per issue, at 630 Victory Blvd., Apt. 6F, Staten Island, NY 10301. It's fun reading and Simon has almost as many wild and crazy ideas as I do. Perhaps we should both for that other strange idea floating about from Robert Sacks, the Crazy Wacko Award.

THE SCRIBBLERIST RETURNS! Just when you got used to the idea that there really could be a hobby member named Mark Lilleleht he decides to publish a zine with a name equally hard to pronounce (Where have I heard all this before?). Several issues have appeared and this one looks particularly dangerous since it is both literate and Diplomacy oriented. My only complaint is the tiny print he's using. I can't read half of it. A sample can be had from PO Box 3166, Charlottesville, VA 22903-0166.

VORTEX DOWN THE TUBES: For the second time that I know of THE VORTEX, published by Dave Gorham, has folded leaving its games in the hands of the Orphans Project people. Not to worry, however. For once they were on top of the situation from the start.

THE GENERAL's featured game this time is devoted to one of the more interesting minor battles of WWII, the raid on St. Nazaire, another of Churchill's brain storms. This battle has also appealed to me because one of my French relatives was involved in it. The game is US$22 and the issue is US$3.00 (Vol. 24, No. 4), both from Avalon Hill Game Co., 4517 Harford Rd. Baltimore, MD 21214. AH is raising the price of The GENERAL but the zine is going to 60 pages to compensate for that.

PAPER MAYHEM: If you're into serious PBM gaming (Not the kind that Tallman and Hinton try to pawn off on unsuspecting dupes) check out PAPER MAYHEM (#32, July/August 1988, $4.50). I'd tell you where to find them but I can't find an address in the current issue. See if you can find a copy in your local game store. It's good.

MORE CANADIAN HYPE: Bill LaFosse, who used to publish a zine called TORONTO TELEGRAM, is back and looking for players, etc. Check it out (I say "it" because he hasn't decided on a new name for the zine yet.) at 65 Barbara St., Trenton, Ontario K8V 1Z6, CANADA.

WELCOME ABOARD: All you new subbers and there are a lot of you this time around. One new sub did attract my attention particularly this issue. Michael Jackson sent in an order for an issue. But why, Mike, did you have to mail it in a glove box and stuff the check into the middle finger of that funny looking glove you sent?

INTERNATIONAL DEMO GAME CONTINUES ON: Our International Demo Game is progressing and I hope to bring you up to date on its results in the Fall issue.

SPEAKING OF THE FALL ISSUE: As I mentioned elsewhere we're going to be featuring a report on all the cons and tournaments held this past summer so if you attended any of these events please send us a page or two on what happened. In addition I'll have a report on my trip to DIPCON and WORLD DIPCON, and some of the other things I saw and did on my vacation. Since it was the first one I've had since I took over DW three years ago I made the most of it. We're also going to have a big feature on boardgames devoted to World War I and the territory covered on the Diplomacy mapboard. That should be fun. Plus there's all the stuff held over from this issue. So don't forget to renew your sub if it ends with this issue and if you have anything for next issue be sure to get it to us by 1 October.

FINAL CONFLICT IV: Tom Swider, 262-D Garfield Ave., Collingswood, NJ 08108, is working on a revision of his WWII cum Diplomacy variant called Final Conflict IV. If you'd like to add a nuclear bomb or two to your fleets and armies drop him a line and inquire.

DW DEMO GAME: We're looking for players for a DW Demo Game to be run by a top GM and with some of the best players in the hobby. We also need someone to write the commentary for it to be published in DW. If you'd like to play, GM, or do the commentary contact Mark Berch (address on the inside cover). As one added attraction one person who has signed up is Dan Sellers, who just happens to be the new North American Diplomacy champion (as determined at this year's DIPCON in San Antonio). So if you want to play with a real Machiavelli type...

ZINE REGISTER #12: Ken Peel, 8708 First Ave., #T-2, Silver Spring, MD 20910, has just published the latest issue of his Zine Register publication that lists and evaluates a wide variety of hobby publications, services, organizations, etc. One issue is 75¢, four issues are $3.00, and a single issue is free if you ordered the DW Sampler. It's a quick and painless way to find out what's where in the hobby press.

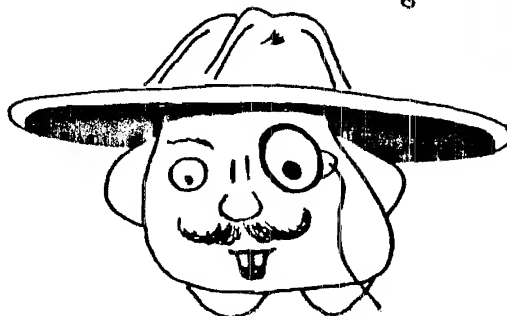

PONTEVEDRIA #46, or 47, or 48 is here! Rod Walker is back at it again and his new system updates the PONTEVEDRIA listings constantly so you always get the latest game openings info. It's free but send a SASE with your request to Rod at 1273 Crest Dr., Encinitas, CA 92024.

A BOOK PREVIEW: If any of you have read or do read Paul Kennedy's THE RISE AND FALL OF THE GREAT POWERS this summer I'd like to hear what you think of it. If you haven't heard of it I commend it to all of you, Diplomacy and non-Diplomacy types alike.

FINAL WORD: That's it. I returned from Europe five days ago and this issue is going to the printer tomorrow. Hopefully it will be in the mail and to you within another ten days. That's not too bad. Now if I can just get caught up on the mail, PEERICON over with, I might be able to take a day off before I start on DW #51.
